I feel as if I should deserve extra credit points for a few reasons. First, I took your advice and used your tips of getting good color schemes from https://color.adobe.com/create/color-wheel below

I then used various CSS styles for my work, such as the flexbox and the grid to organize my work. I used the perfect media queries to make sure there's no possibility that my borders and image cross.

I got an image that adapt to my website colors, along with a border radius making it circular, but only on mobile because it fits the theme and its purpose.

I also used CSS transitions, the long Ish text that looks good form far away, when you hover are in a sort of box that makes it between for your eyes to group the text and read, and that also has a border radius.

I have also included proper comments.
